Some things to keep in mind:

- If the article cites authors (unlike the example above), provide the authorship information.
- Credo Reference has a built-in citation tool which is incorrect. Simply copying and pasting from the Credo entry page will result in an incorrect citation.

If you choose to continue your search in another resource using any of Credo's integrated resources, you will then be using a different type of resource, and your citation will need to look different.

Depending on where you continue your search, you may need to cite an article from a database OR another electronic reference work. Remember that an article from a database is cited using a DOI when available or a journal publisher's URL when no DOI is available.

Here are two examples of citations for articles from databases:

Scholarly Journal Article with DOI (three authors)

Archbold, C.A., Hassell, K. D., & Stichman, A. (2010). Comparing promotion aspirations among female and male police officers. International Journal of Police Science & Management, 12, 287-303. doi:10.1350/ijps.2010.12.2.175

1st in-text citation: (Archbold, Hassel, & Stichman, 2010) Subsequent: (Archbold et al., 2010)

Scholarly Journal Article without DOI [Electronic from database] (two authors)
